- In January 1541, Jacques Cartier expected to be named Lieutenant Governor of Canada by King Francis I.
- King Francis I appointed Jean-François de La Rocque de Roberval as Lieutenant Governor of French Canada. He had become a Protestant since 1535 (after the Placard affair).
- Jacques Cartier was appointed by the King as the guide; he was made responsible for
- De Roberval was responsible for...
- The expedition was delayed...
- Cartier was sent ahead in May 1541 with 200 would-be colonists
- Arrived in August 1541, with de Roberval arriving the following year in the spring of 1542.
- Cartier set the colonists and craftsmen to plant crops and build a fort, leaving on September 7 to explore and find the Kingdom of the Saguenay.
- While Cartier was away exploring, the Iroquois attacked and killed 35 settlers
- On his way back to France in the spring of 1542, Cartier stopped in St. John Newfoundland where he met de Roberval
- It was difficult for de Roberval and his men to establish a settlement

- De Roberval also explored along the Saguenay River
- A rescue ship was sent in 1543 to take them back to France. No more exploratory trips were made to Canada for about 50 years.
